

Editorial Message

It is our pleasure to initiate the ‘Journal of Information, Knowledge and Libraries (JIKL)’ by the Central Department of Library and Information Science, Tribhuvan University. It was a need for the department to enhance scholarly communication. The very scholarly need is fulfilled by the start of the journal. It is a bi-annual journal. Students, teachers, scholars, practitioners, and professionals of library and information services and other related disciplines can participate in the publication of research-based articles. It is open to the national and international research scope.

The scope of the journal is extended to data management, digital information service, digital library, library services, reference library services, community library, library extensive services, information marketing, information repackaging, artificial intelligence, information literacy, digital literacy, media literacy, AI literacy, archives management, intellectual property, library legislation and policies, Information Communication Technology in library and information management, plagiarism, library automation and repository software, and so on.

This first issue has altogether seven articles covering digital resources, library legislation, community library, AI ethics, academic writing, ICT use in libraries, digital data preservation, and so on. These are majorly the research products from masters’ degree research project during the partial fulfillment of their academic course.
