

Editorial

Serving as the Editor-in-Chief of RR Interdisciplinary Journal, the official Journal of Ratna Rajyalaxmi Campus, one of the largest campuses in Kathmandu, is a wonderful pleasure and privilege for me. Since its launch in 2010, the Interdisciplinary Journal has published research journal of higher quality. It is now a peer-reviewed journal for a few years. This annual publication is to propel to even greater levels of readership and renown. I am proud of the new editorial staff who have untiringly strived to enrich the quality of this journal. They have invested their invaluable times in keeping the true founding principles of this journal.

Reviewing all the articles submitted by the researchers was delightful after getting involved in a number of domestic and international journals and magazines. As a result, I am aware of the subtleties and significance of ethical peer-review and manuscript handling. I highly appreciate the editorial team's effectiveness, commitment and the priceless efforts of reviewers who invested their scholarship in guiding the valued researchers.

At this juncture, I would like to advise new and enthusiastic colleagues not to get too caught up in the conventional wisdom of 'publish and perish'. The prominent young researchers should invest more time in their scholarship and contribute insights to the entire academia.

One excellent and contributory publication is superior to a pile of petty publications that only makes the presence in the publication but contributes nothing to the academia. We have published all the articles with a rigorous peer-evaluation and sophistication. We have ensured the journal guidelines in each stage of our endeavors.

I believe delays in the editorial processing is a common and unavoidable occurrence. I would like to encourage enthusiastic researchers for the submission of more unique articles for our next publication. Finally, I would like to encourage all researches to make your research works timely and authentic with high quality references in your upcoming ventures.
