The primary function of Higher Education Institutions (HEIs) is to produce knowledge and disseminate it to the students, who will contribute to the nation in various ways. To achieve this goal, HEIs worldwide provide formal education and confer degrees. Teaching has been a major means to do so.

However, the production of knowledge is not only related to teaching; it can also be achieved through research. Apart from HEIs, the government and research centers are engaged in research activities that contribute to national development.

Many HEIs provide formal education in Nepal, some of which are working the rural remote parts of the country. Shree Shadananda Multiple Campus is running in the Eastern hills of Nepal, in a rural setting. For this reason, it is facing hardships in both technical and financial matters.

Despite difficulties, the Research Management Committee of this campus has managed to publish a scholarly journal. For this journal, there are many challenges, such as faculty resources and capacity, yet the campus prioritizes published journals and research.

This is a multi-disciplinary journal that incorporates articles and research reports that contribute to education, development, and social change. This is a multi-disciplinary journal that accepts manuscripts from scholars from around the world based on original studies of themes and issues across various disciplines such as social science, education, management, literature, arts that are connected to the broad rubric of education. We believe that the publication of this journal has motivated and contributed to the academic journey of the faculty of this campus.

We would like to thank all contributors of the journal and the entire campus family for the research and publication of this journal.
