It is a matter of pleasure to present Voice: A Biannual and Bilingual Journal, Volume 17, Number 2, December 2025, published by the Autar Dei Chaudharain Research Centre (ADCRC) at Mahendra Multiple Campus, Nepalgunj, Banke, Nepal. This issue brings together nine articles in total, six written in English and three in Nepali. The range of topics covered in this volume shows the journal's continuing effort to include different areas of study such as literature, education, social sciences, management and cultural studies.

The articles included here deal with issues that are closely connected to present-day realities. Some papers look at literary texts and discuss themes like urban life, class and identity. Others focus on socio-economic concerns such as migration, remittance practices and financial inclusion in Nepal. There are also studies related to education and society that examine classroom practices, health awareness and the influence of social and cultural factors. Taken together, these works provide useful insights into the changing patterns of society and everyday life.

As a bilingual journal, Voice continues to provide space for both Nepali and English writing. Including articles in both languages helps reach a wider group of readers and supports the sharing of ideas across different backgrounds. It also helps maintain the use of Nepali in academic writing while engaging with the broader scholarly community.

The publication of this issue would not have been possible without the efforts of the authors, reviewers and the editorial team. Their time and commitment are sincerely acknowledged. Thanks are also due to the readers whose continued interest encourages the journal to move forward. This issue, like the previous ones, aims to support academic work and promote thoughtful discussion.
